The Shooting.

A white man by the name of Thomas Lane, a new comer to this city, who boasted of being the "worst G—d d—l man that was ever in this place," became intoxicated Wednesday afternoon and went into the grocery of Mr. Taylor G. Daily, on the corner of High and Main streets, turned over the stove, set fire to the floor, made himself generally obnoxious, and was put out by Mr. Daily. He returned about 7 o'clock in the evening and entered the store again, when Mr. Daily stepped to the door, opened it and said to Lane, "you have done enough in my house and I want you to leave." Lane started towards the door and just before reaching it drew a pistol and cocked it, when Daily ran behind the counter, Lane stepped just outside the door, leaving it partly open, with his pistol pointed and ready to shoot Daily as soon as he should step out from behind the counter, seeing which Daily, who had gotten his pistol, fired at him through the glass of the door the ball striking him in the right side of the neck just below the jawbone ranged back and downward inflicting a serious if not fatal wound. He fell to the pavement instantly, but Daily, thinking he was still there, fired a second time, the ball passing through the same hole in the glass made by the first one.

Officer Brown was soon on the scene, and found Lane's pistol cocked and lying on the pavement by his side. Daily immediately surrendered to the officers, and was placed under bond to await the action of the grand jury, which is now in session. Dr. E. E. Hume dressed Lane's wound and he is doing as well as possible under the circumstances.

Just as the train containing the soldier boys began moving off from the depot Monday afternoon, Capt. Jack Veach, who was sitting on a camp stool on the flat car at the rear of the train, reached out his hand to take leave of some of his friends, when the stool on which he was sitting turned over, his feet slipped on the icy floor of the car, and he fell off on the ground, bruising himself considerably. The engineer was signaled, who stopped the train at the upper end of the tunnel and the Captain was taken on board again.

The correspondent of the Louisville Commercial, who accompanied the militia to Carter county, seems to think his mission was to blacken the character of the Frankfort boys and hold up the detail from Louisville as paragons of morality. The truth is, the trip from Louisville to Lexington was so utterly devoid of any incident that would enable him to manufacture anything like a sensational letter that he gave loose rein to his imagination. The statement of this disciple of Aeneas that the Frankfort boys were drunk and behaving badly is flatly contradicted by two gentlemen from this city who were on the train with the soldiers. They say that two of the members of the McCreary and a like number of the Nuckols Guards were a little off; that one of the McCreary's shot off a pistol, but upon Major Price threatening to put him under arrest if it was repeated the pistol was put away and not seen any more; that one of the Nuckols, who was drinking became noisy but was soon quieted by Captain Rodman, who placed him under arrest. Fully as many of the Louisville boys were drinking, as anyone who saw them exhibiting an empty bottle and making asses of themselves at the depot in this city, can testify.

We think that the sweet scented young man of the Commercial will find he has made a mistake if he remains at Grayson until the close of the trial. In fact we feel confident he will be made aware of it if he frequents the camp of the Frankfort soldiers.

Such lying writers as he is in a great measure responsible for the excitement that has been gotten up over the Neal and Craft trial, and the good people of Grayson would do not only themselves but the entire State a service by tying a tin kettle to him and fring him out of their town.

Happening to be in Louisville the first of the week, we called around at the establishment of Mr. B. F. Meek, and found him comfortable situated on the third floor of the building on the south-east corner of 5th and Jefferson. He has put in a splendid lot of machinery and is nearly ready to begin the manufacture of an improved fishing reel. His lathes and other machinery are all driven by a neat little gas engine that occupies no more space than an ordinary cooking stove, which can be started in a minute and run at an expense of about two dollars per week, and makes things hum.

Mr. Meek himself was not in when we called, but Mr. Pitt Meek kindly explained the workings of the new machinery and in what particular the reel they propose making will be an improvement over others. The pinions are to be made of drawn steel and wheels of wrought brass, the cog-being cut diagonal and spiral, and some of the sizes larger than those heretofore manufactured. He has a number of orders on hand already, and hopes to be able to begin filling them by the first of March. We can safely say that all our citizens wish Mr. Meek the greatest success in his new enterprise.

Off for Grayson.

In obedience to orders issued by the Governor, the McCreary Guards, Nuckols Guards and Governor's Light Artillery left Monday afternoon for Grayson to be present at the trial of Neal and Craft. The McCrearys were commanded by Lieutenant Frank Rodman, the Nuckols by Capt. Joe Rodman and the Light Artillery by Capt. Jack Veach, the battalion being under the command of Major J. Lampton Price.

In the morning our boys were joined by the McKee Guards, of Lawrenceburg, and Major L. W. McKee, of the Second Battalion, and in the afternoon at four o'clock a special train arrived from Louisville with a detail of the Louisville Legion and a section of the Light Artillery from that city on board. In a few minutes the soldiers from this city and Lawrenceburg were also marched into the train and it pulled out for Lexington. At Midway the Blackburn Guards joined the command and at Lexington the Lexington Guards and Emmet Rifles, of Maysville, were awaiting them. Tuesday morning the whole command, in charge of Col. John R. Allen, of the Second Regiment, left for Grayson, picking up the Clark County Rifles at Winchester and Cerro Gordo Guards at Mt. Sterling, arrived at their destination that afternoon and are encamped in the edge of the town of Grayson awaiting the action of the court.

At last accounts our boys were all doing well notwithstanding the inclement weather. We made arrangements to receive a letter each week during their stay, but for some reason this week's failed to come to hand in time for publication.
